FROM BLADES OF GRASS.

By Charles A. Starks.

'Tis morning, I lie in bed, gazing out my kitchen window, looking perhaps for some hints of a sunshiny day. I finally note a few blades of grass with pointed tongues reaching up above the rock sill; these are bristling with a golden color which I know is not their own, and I conclude from this that the Sun is awake to the Sun, because the sun never moves, but lives and shines always, without ceasing. It cannot stop, it must shine, it must reflect the great principle of life-truth.

But why do I only see one bright beam enjeweling the blades of grass, when there is an old wagon nearby and an old barn and other objects under the sun's light? The thought comes to me that it is the location of these blades of grass that peculiarizes them and appears to give them greater glory. The other objects may be hidden even by other objects and are therefore denied this present glory. This I have called position, because in a like manner it is true of us. The Sun does not move—Truth does not change. If some objects seem more glorified than others, we have learned it is owing to their position. If the light of truth seems brighter in some people than it does in others, it is because of their difference of attitude. The Sun does not move; truth does not change, but men are restless creatures. And as I lie, look and write, I note now that everything is aglow with livelier hue. The old wagon, the old barn are now shining with the gliding dye of the Sun. From this gleam that though some objects by their peculiar position reflect the sunshine before others, still all objects are sure to be affected sooner or later. And so learn the truth—some early, some late. But all shall know. All shall see the light of heaven. This thought makes me glad, and I find myself thanking the blades of grass—the reflection—the sun—God!

WHAT PROHIBITION IS DOING FOR THE NEGRO.

One of the most astonishing revolutions in history is taking place in the southern states. A few years ago, despite all the optimistic talk of his friends, the Negro was getting ahead chiefly as a consumer of whisky. Today good times and prohibition together are making not only good citizens but substantial citizens of thousands of Negroes who a few years ago owned a hound dog and a whisky appetite and nothing else.

Mr. N. L. Willett, writing in the Augusta Chronicle, says that within a hundred-mile radius of Augusta it is estimated that from 3,000 to 5,000 automobiles, ranging in value from $400 to $1,300, will be sold this season to Negro farmers. One agent in Augusta, according to Mr. Willett, has already sold this fall 35 $1,300 cars and nearly every one of them went to Negroes. White men throughout the South are regarding the change with great complacency. A Negro who has an automobile has a stake in the country, and usually behaves himself.

THEY SAY

—That the club outlook is not very promising. "Eats" come too high.

—That there's no more detestable Negro in the world than the one who will not pay his debts.

—That there are more Negroes trying to live by their wits in Kansas City than most any other town in the country.

—That there are a lot of girls in Kansas City who can can. One canned 125 quarts of tomatoes last month. That's the way to can, girls.

—That G. A. Page has already saved the public $50.00 on raincoats, which he has at his disposal, of every kind, color and weight, at his well known shoe store, 1507 East 18th street.

—That one high society dame says that as soon as she can put her hands on another high society dame, she's going to give her the worst "licking" she ever had in her life. What for?

—That one hour burning of gasoline in the buzz wagon at $3 per hour equals two warm suits of underwear this winter at $1.50 a suit. Figure it out.

—That a minister called at a certain house to have a short religious service the other day, and when he asked the lady if she had a Testament she said, "I don't know what you're talking about."

Three wise women are happy today because they have found their real preference in toilet preparations. — Quinoleum Quality Products — the most satisfying to Mladys Toilette.
